Faculty
Mr. Mario Tejada, Jr.

Faculty, Chair of Distance Education
Diablo Valley College/San Ramon Valley Campus

After college I went to work at a software company as a hardware and software tech, a network tech, a programmer, a help desk tech and finally as a trainer. I spent the next 2 years as an independent consultant working for the Contra Costa Water District and the non-profit organization IFES - the International Foundation for Electoral Systems, which is the world's premiere election assistance organization, providing countries with the technical advice and tools they need to run democratic elections. My first assignment was to South Africa to help with the 1994 Nelson Mandela elections. I worked in Ghana with the Ghanaian Electoral Commission designing and training their IT staff in preparation for the 1997 national elections.

I was hired by Diablo Valley College in 1996 and I am an instructor at Diablo Valley College's San Ramon Campus in the San Francisco bay area. I currently teach in the Computer Information Systems, Computer Networking Technologies and Computer Science areas. I teach courses in traditional, hybrid and online formats. I have been teaching online for approximately 14 years.

I am the current Chair of the Distance Education Committee, Co-Chair of the Student Learning Outcomes committee, a member of the President's Accreditation Advisory Committee, the DVC Technology Committee, the District's Learning Management System Work Group, the District's Distance Education Council and a past member of the curriculum committee (6 years).
